I will begin this by saying Carlos is one of the most exceptional professors I've had in my 4 years at UNR. From the moment he handed out the syllabus, I knew this was going to be a fantastic class. He made a color coded highly detailed syllabus, even informing us the time it would take to do our readings down to the minute. And it was ridiculously accurate. In addition to his amazing organizational skills (which makes it significantly easier to follow a certain line of thought logically through the course), he was a very entertaining instructor. He engaged with the class, learned about all the students, and appears to care infinitely about his field and sharing his knowledge with students. He cares about the subject he teaches and that reflects in his passionate lectures. For the love of God, give this man tenure and funding. I am certain future generations will read his name in history books.

Please provide your thoughts on the course as a whole, including strengths and areas for possible improvement.

The course itself was not too easy nor too hard. It was evaluated fairly and my grade reflects my effort/knowledge in Carlos' class. We covered a wide array of topics in depth enough that I can have conversations about almost every subject we covered.

As an education major, I would argue that Dr. Mariscal needs professional development courses in how to effectively assess his students. His tests and quizzes are highly specific (Test 1 was mostly date-memorization). In order to build accurate and effective assessments, he should be testing over broad concepts and ideas. Making students take quizzes every week over chapter readings and only asking them two questions based off of a single sentence from that reading does not adequately assess student learning.

Please provide your thoughts on the course as a whole, including strengths and areas for possible improvement.

Carlos is clearly educated in his subject area, but his pedagogical practices are highly lacking. There is little to no point to attend his class because his assessments are not based on his lecture/notes. Tests are frequently dates and/or minuscule details. If you are teaching a group of future educators (like Mariscal is), I argue you should be adequately educated on how to properly assess students on their learning.

Carlos is clearly very knowledgeable about the subject. Space topic is cool, human engineering topic is cool, but damn the topic on climate change is morbid. It felt like a lot of classes were about, "here's another way you'll die in 10 years." I stopped going to class because it was depressing and terrifying.

Course is fair, topics discussed in readings and in lecture were in tests. Maybe shorten the readings? Hour-long readings to answer 2 or 3 questions seemed a bit much to me.

I really enjoyed Professor Mariscal's teaching style. He listened to everyone's questions, concerns, and answered them to the best of his ability; whether if it may be reassuring towards the students or simply giving appropriate advice. Not only that but he listened to everyone, even if some opinions were abrasive or sometimes even rude towards the lesson plan. I think that level of tolerance is very admirable. I am also happy with what I received out of the class. The lessons were sometimes very heavy, but near the end this only pushed me to be better. But discussing sensitive and broad topics made me feel comfortable in school. On the side note, I looked forward to coming to this class. At first I was skeptical, but it eventually grew onto me and became one of my favorite classes. I'm glad I chose this class as my capstone since I did not feel as though I had to force myself to read and go to class. Motivation came from within me rather than school being an obligation due to financial means. I very much would recommend this class to anyone! The discussions made me feel more than safe and comfortable in my own thoughts and mostly others.

The professor has a very strong and clear knowledge of all topics covered in this course. The struggles I came across were times where we would go very off topic. I would do the readings before class, come to class understanding what I read, and then leave class confused. This did not happen all the time but it made certain topics foggy in my opinion. The instructor was very helpful if students asked questions and was open for all discussion, which I appreciated.

I also wish that he would have tentative dates for exams in the syllabus and would tell us when an exam is coming up. The content is linked to the exams, but we don't have ways of studying other than the slides. I liked using Acadyly but it is too hard to have 2 different sources to check for grades, announcements, and assignments.

I felt the class was a great break from the monotone science classes I normally take. My suggestion for improvement is to have more clear expectations of the essays for the exams. I feel confident about my responses until they are graded and I feel that more clear expectations would have improved my performance.

Carlos is literally THE coolest professor I've ever had!!! I learned something interesting in every single lecture— even in the units I wasn't very interested in (which isn't his fault at all). He has great energy and a sense of humor that makes lecture not only bearable, but actually enjoyable. Sometimes he'd move past PowerPoint slides a little too fast which made in-class note taking a bit difficult, but we had access to the slides outside of class, so that wasn't a huge deal. His enthusiasm for the content made all the difference for me.

This course was way cooler than I expected. My philosophy classes up until now have been pretty dry. Dry, but fun. But this one was fun pretty much the entire time. I can't think of anything this course needs for improvement.

The only improvement I would recommend is that he slept a few more hours a week.
